A Christmas Surprise For Mother Goose

Laura Rountree Smith

Once upon a time in the land of nursery rhymes, dear Mother Goose, the one who cared for all the characters we love so much, sat alone on a cold Christmas Day. She sighed and wished for company, for on this festive day, all her storybook children seemed to have forgotten her.

But as if the magic of Christmas heard her lonely wish, a knock sounded on her door. It was Mother Hubbard, the kind-hearted woman with a pie in her hands. "I've brought you a mince pie, Mother Goose," she said cheerfully, "to warm your Christmas Day." She left the pie on Mother Goose's table and went to stand by the side, filling the room with her warmth.

The knocks on the door didn't stop there. Jack Horner came next, bringing a plum from his Christmas pie, and then came little Bo-Peep, who had found her sheep and brought a message of love and Christmas cheer. Boy Blue, with his blaring horn, made Mother Goose laugh, reminding everyone how merriment fills the air on Christmas.

Next to arrive was Red Riding Hood, who bravely walked through the woods to bring butter and cake for Mother Goose. Miss Muffet came along, bringing a large spider that made everyone, including Mother Goose, jump in surprise!

Simple Simon, without a penny to his name, gave Mother Goose a handkerchief and a heart full of love. Cross-Patch, usually sour, was in high spirits and brought a beautiful cup. Jack and Jill came tumbling after, presenting a pail full of candy. The room filled with their laughter, making the Christmas Day even merrier.

The last to arrive was the Queen of Hearts. She had baked more tarts especially for Mother Goose, claiming that the one who gives out tokens of love is the true queen of hearts on Christmas Day.

Suddenly, the room was full of laughter, love, and Christmas cheer. Mother Goose wasn't alone anymore; she was surrounded by all her storybook children, who had brought their love and warmth. Their joyful voices filled the room as they declared their love for Mother Goose.

Touched by their love and gestures, Mother Goose thanked them all. "Remember, my dears," she said, "that giving is indeed the best part of living."

As the stars twinkled outside, Simple Simon led Mother Goose to her seat, and all the characters gathered around her, waving and laughing. As sleep began to take over, the storybook land of Mother Goose was filled with the sounds of a joyful Christmas. And everyone, especially Mother Goose, slept with a heart full of love and warmth, promising to remember the joy of giving on every Christmas Day.
